LETTERS

London, England To the Editor:

It is good to have the January issue of THE CATHOLIC LAWYER which arrived yesterday and which I have just read.

If you have not heard from me since the early fall, it is because I have had a great deal of illness throughout the winter and have only returned into circulation a week ago.

We are all expectant here on the arrival of the American Bar Association in July 1957. Will it be possible for us to have a list of the Catholic delegates in advance?

I hope you may get this little note before the end of the Easter season. It carries our united remembrances and a multitude of good wishes to you in your work.

Ex caritate ora pro nobis.

Richard O'Sullivan

Editor's Note

The Eightieth Annual Meeting of the American Bar Association will be held in New York and London in July 1957. The New York meeting will be scheduled early enough to permit the meeting to adjourn and reconvene in London on or about July 24.

Because of the limited housing facilities in London it is obvious that only a fraction of the membership of the American Bar Association and their families can be accommodated. It is important, therefore, that anyone planning to attend the London meeting should notify the American Bar Association Reservation Office as soon as possible.

The Catholic lawyers of London will probably make arrangements not only for a Red Mass but for visits to those parts of England which are of particular importance to Catholics with a legal or historical background or interest.

Catholic lawyers in Paris and Rome have also indicated an interest in the plans of American lawyers for the 1957 meeting and will undoubtedly be glad to supply information on places in those cities which Catholic lawyers would like to visit.

In order to supply Mr. O'Sullivan with the information he requests, Catholic members of the American Bar Association who plan to attend the London meeting are requested to write to The Catholic Lawyer as soon as possible.

No details of the London program have as yet been announced by the American Bar Association. It is certain, however, that Thomas Cook and Sons and the American Express Company, who are handling arrangements for transportation to and from London, will also make available tours to other parts of Europe after the close of the Convention.

It is not yet apparent whether any of the official tours can be modified if enough interest is shown to warrant inclusion of cities or places not presently included.

Readers who are interested in a tour that would include such places as Lourdes and Fatima as well as Paris and Rome are invited to communicate with THE CATHOLIC LAWYER.

It is likely that such a trip would probably take from two to three weeks in addition to the time spent at the Convention and in traveling to and from London.
