Judicial Immunity in Bar Admissions

Katherine Ann Wopat

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarship.law.stjohns.edu/jcred

This Comment is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at St. John's Law Scholarship Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Journal of Civil Rights and Economic Development by an authorized editor of St. John's Law Scholarship Repository. For more information, please contact selbyc@stjohns.edu.
CONCLUSION

The issue of professional liability to nonclients will continue to arise in the judicial setting. As additional exceptions are carved, the courts will be forced to address the privity requirements as it relates to attorneys. The majority of states, including New York, still require privity in order to recover in negligence from an attorney while acting in his professional capacity. Those states that do not require strict privity have articulated various tests to determine whether or not an attorney owed a duty of care to a nonclient. It is submitted that the strict privity requirement is in jeopardy in New York and courts may expose attorneys to liability for professional negligence to plaintiffs with whom they are not in privity.

Melinda R. Katz

JUDICIAL IMMUNITY IN BAR ADMISSIONS

Each state establishes its own bar admission procedures which require the applicant to meet certain character and fitness criteria. Generally, the qualifications for admission require a prospective attorney to possess a bachelor's degree, a law degree from an approved school, to pass a written examination, and to establish

2 Law. Man. on Prof. Conduct (ABA/BNA) § 21:101. Graduation from an ABA-approved law school is to "provide uniform and measurable standards by which to assess the qualifications of applicants." LaBossiere v. Florida Bd. of Bar Examiners, 279 So. 2d 288, 289 (Fla. 1973). There is reliance on the ABA due to the fact that state supreme courts are "unequipped to make such a determination . . . because of financial limitations and the press of judicial business." Id.
3 California has a "Baby Bar" requirement that students attending law schools not approved by California's Committee of Bar Examiners must take and pass an exam at the end of their first year so as to receive credit from the Committee for further study. See Lupert v. California State Bar, 761 F.2d 1325, 1328 (9th Cir.) (upheld constitutionality of Baby Bar), cert. denied, and appeal dismissed, 474 U.S. 916 (1985).
4 Law. Man. on Prof. Conduct (ABA/BNA) § 21:101. See Richardson v. McFadden, 540 F.2d 744, 748 (4th Cir. 1976) (purpose of bar examination is to distinguish between those his good moral character. The judiciary is charged with regulating who may practice law. In a majority of states the highest court is the ultimate arbiter of who shall be admitted to practice.
Survey of Professional Responsibility

Courts are permitted to delegate their authority to a board of bar examiners or a fitness committee.

Evaluating a person’s fitness to practice law is a subjective determination. Therefore, it is not surprising that bar admission engenders much litigation. The doctrine of judicial immunity insulates a judge’s judicial acts from vexatious lawsuits, thereby insuring their independence and the proper administration of jusdemonstrating minimal competence” and those who do not), modified, 563 F.2d 1130 (4th Cir. 1977) (en banc), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 968 (1978); Tyler v. Vickery, 517 F.2d 1089, 1101 (5th Cir. 1975) (bar exam tests minimal present competence), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 940 (1976).

See, e.g., Ex parte Secombe, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 9, 13 (1856) (“[W]ell settled . . . that it rests exclusively with the court to determine who is qualified to become one of its officers”); Feldman v. State Board of Law Examiners, 438 F.2d 699, 702 (8th Cir. 1971) (judicial branch has exclusive jurisdiction to admit and disbar attorneys, though legislature may pass general rules). See generally Alpert, The Inherent Power of the Courts to Regulate the Practice of Law: An Historical Analysis, 32 Buffalo L. Rev. 525 (1983) (discussion of how courts successfully took control over bar). Twelve states give responsibility for admission to the judiciary through their constitution. See Ark. Const. art. XXVIII, amend. 28; Fla. Const. art. V, § 15; Ind. Const. art. VII, § 4; Ky. Const. § 116; La. Const. art V, § 5(B); Mont. Const. art. VII, § 2; N.J. Const. art. VI, § 2, cl. 3; N.D. Const. art IV, § 87; Ohio Const. art. IV, § 2(B); Pa. Const. art. V, § 10(e); S.C. Const. art V, § 4; Vt. Const. § 30.

See Special Project, Admission to the Bar: A Constitutional Analysis, 34 Vand. L. Rev. 655, 662 (1981) (“Typically, state supreme court acts as the general overseer . . . .”). In New York, it is the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court which is responsible for determining whether the applicant possesses moral character and fitness. N.Y. Jud. Law § 90(l)(a) (McKinney 1983).

See In re Brennan, 230 App. Div. 218, 219, 243 N.Y.S. 705, 706 (1930) (character and fitness committee appointed by Appellate Division to certify applicants for admission to bar); Hill, Appellate Review of Moral Character and Fitness Determinations, B. Exam., Aug. 1982, at 22, 23 (because appellate courts are not equipped to hear and record evidence, board is usually created to make initial fitness determination). See N.Y. Jud. Law § 90(l)(c).

See Rhode, supra note 4, at 529 (inherent subjectivity of moral fitness). Because of the ambiguity surrounding the good moral character requirement, the Supreme Court held that any qualifications must have “a rational connection to the applicant’s fitness . . . to practice law.” Schware, 353 U.S. at 239. See Comment, The Investigation of Good Moral Character for Admission to the Virginia Bar - Time for a Change, 19 U. Rich. L. Rev. 601, 605 (1985) (“rational relation” test, without guidelines, is of little value).

See Special Project, supra note 6, at 658.
Whether the doctrine of judicial immunity applies to bar admission decisions was the issue in the recent case of Sparks v. Character and Fitness Committee of Kentucky.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit held in Sparks that the actions taken by the state supreme court and the character and fitness committee in connection with the admission of an applicant to the state bar were judicial acts for which absolute immunity attached. Sparks had sued the Chief Justice of the Kentucky Supreme Court and the Kentucky Character and Fitness Committee for damages pursuant to the Civil Rights Act, alleging violations of his procedural and substantive due process rights in the court's refusal to admit him into the bar.

The district court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the defendants enjoyed absolute immunity. Although the court of appeals affirmed, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment and directed it to reconsider in light

In Stump, the Court held that a circuit judge was immune from a Section 1983 damages suit for his approval of a mother's petition for permission to have her "somewhat retarded" fifteen year old daughter sterilized. 435 U.S. at 349. The case reaffirmed the doctrine that judicial acts, even if malicious and unconstitutional, are absolutely immune unless performed in the clear absence of jurisdiction. Id. at 356-57. In Pierson, a municipal police justice was given immunity from a Section 1983 damage suit for his judicial acts in convicting a group of white and black clergymen for breach of the peace while they were attempting to use a segregated bus terminal. 386 U.S. at 547. But see, e.g., Pulliam v. Allen, 466 U.S. 522, 541-42 (1984) (judicial immunity does not bar prospective injunctive relief against a judicial officer under 42 U.S.C. § 1983); O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 503 (1974) (judges not immune from criminal prosecution for civil rights violations).

A major reason for granting judicial immunity has been the need for decisions to be rendered free of any personal considerations, including personal liability. See Stump, 435 U.S. at 363 (quoting Bradley for the proposition that judicial officers must be "free to act upon [their] own convictions without apprehension of personal consequences"). See generally Block, Stump v. Sparkman and the History of Judicial Immunity, 1980 Duke L.J. 879 (comprehensive history of the development of judicial immunity).

12 Sparks, 859 F.2d at 429. To assert a cause of action under the Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1983, a plaintiff must show that the defendant acted under color of state law or authority to deprive the plaintiff of a right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States. See Sykes v. California, 497 F.2d 197, 199-200 (9th Cir. 1974).

An associate member of the Kentucky Bar Committee determined, based on an interview with the applicant, that Sparks lacked the requisite moral and character fitness to practice law. Sparks, 859 F.2d at 429. The record does not indicate the basis of the decision. Sparks, 818 F.2d 541, 542 (6th Cir. 1987).

14 Sparks, 818 F.2d at 542.
of the Court’s ruling in Forrester v. White. The court of appeals distinguished Forrester and again affirmed.

The Supreme Court in Forrester announced the analytical key for determining what a judicial act is for purposes of granting judicial immunity. The analysis focused on the function performed and not the identity of the actor who performed it. The Sparks Court held that there were three reasons suggested in the Forrester decision which would indicate that the chief justice and the committee members were performing judicial acts. The first was the availability of appellate review which Forrester cited as a central reason for granting judicial immunity. Second, Forrester quoted with approval Bradley v. Fisher, in which judicial immunity was given to a court for disbarring an attorney. The inference was that if disbarment proceedings are judicial acts, then it follows that the power to determine admissions to the bar are also judicial acts. Finally, the determination of bar membership is inherently the function of the judiciary.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE/JUDICIAL DICHOTOMY OF BAR ADMISSIONS

A. The Immunity of Judges

A positive aspect of the Forrester decision is its recognition that there is a need to distinguish judicial acts from administrative or legislative acts. While judicial acts enjoy immunity, the administrative, ministerial and executive aspects of a judge’s duties do not. The procedures for admitting an applicant to the bar have been characterized as part legislative and part adjudicative. Generally, the adjudicative function involves the individualized determination of whether the applicant is fit to practice law in that state, whereas the legislative function is the establishment of rules which apply to every candidate. A judicial act requires the utilization of discretion and judgment which is closely akin to the ad-

---

23 Sparks, 859 F.2d at 434. Employment decisions made by judges have been held to be administrative tasks in which judicial immunity does not attach. Id. See Forrester v. White, 484 U.S. 219, 229 (1988) (dismissal of probation officer not judicial act); Guercio v. Brody, 814 F.2d 1115, 1119 (6th Cir. 1987) (dismissal of confidential secretary is administrative act), vacated in part, reh'g granted, 823 F.2d 166 (1987) (en banc), vacated, 840 F.2d 358, re-reported in full, 859 F.2d 1232 (6th Cir. 1988); McMillan v. Svetanoff, 793 F.2d 149, 155 (7th Cir.) (firing of court reporter is administrative act), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 985 (1986).

However, the admission of attorneys is inherently a judicial function. See Sparks, 859 F.2d at 434; cf. Simons v. Bellinger, 643 F.2d 774, 805 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (bar committee members absolutely immune while exercising inherent judicial power).

25 See Special Project, supra note 6, at 662.

26 Id. See Consumers Union, 446 U.S. at 731 (promulgating a code of rules for attorneys is "not an act of adjudication but one of rulemaking"). See generally Note, Procedural Due Process and Character Hearings for Bar Applicants, 15 Stan. L. Rev. 500, 515 n.76 (1963) (difference between adjudication and rule making).
judication of controversies. The Supreme Court in In re Summers held that "[a] claim of a present right to admission to the bar of a state and a denial of that right is a controversy" within the meaning of Article III of the Constitution. However, when the validity of a rule is not challenged but a petition is made to waive one of its bar admission rules, some courts have found the ensuing state court action is ministerial, not judicial and that the decision rendered is one by a court acting in its administrative capacity. Nevertheless, the majority of the pre-Forrester decisions have concluded that the consideration of an application for admission to the bar is judicial rather than administrative in nature.

B. The Extension of Immunity to Quasi-Judicial Officials

The absolute immunity given to the members of the character and fitness committee in Sparks is not the first instance where a court has given absolute immunity to officials acting in a quasi-judicial capacity. The Supreme Court in Butz v. Economou anounced three considerations which a court must weigh in determining whether to extend immunity: (1) the "functional comparability" of the official's judgments to those of a judge;\textsuperscript{36} (2) whether the nature of the proceeding is such that there is a realistic prospect of harassment by disappointed litigants;\textsuperscript{36} and (3) the availability of safeguards adequate to reduce the need for private damage actions as a means of controlling unconstitutional conduct.\textsuperscript{37}

Bar associations involved in investigating and presenting cases for attorney disciplinary or disbarment proceedings have been granted absolute immunity from damages.\textsuperscript{38} Other courts before \textit{Sparks} have similarly extended absolute immunity to bar committees involved with the admission of attorneys.\textsuperscript{39} The common

Note, \textit{supra} note 24, at 1513 n.73 for cases cited therein. Court clerks are given absolute immunity for actions taken under command of court decrees or under instructions of a judge. \textit{See} Foster v. Walsh, 864 F.2d 416, 417-18 (6th Cir. 1988) (issuance of arrest warrant by clerk at direction of judge is a judicial act); Rogers v. Bruntrager, 841 F.2d 853, 856 (8th Cir. 1988) (clerk absolutely immune for issuance of arrest warrant at direction of judge).

The doctrine of absolute legislative immunity protects individuals while acting within the bounds of their legislative duties. \textit{See, e.g.,} Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 379 (1951) (state legislators absolutely immune from suits for damages under § 1983); Reed v. Village of Shorewood, 704 F.2d 943, 952 (7th Cir. 1983) (legislative immunity applies to local legislators); Herbst v. Daukas, 701 F. Supp. 964, 970 (D. Conn. 1988) (town council members have legislative immunity in their individual capacities for eliminating one lieutenant in police department).

\textsuperscript{36} 438 U.S. 478 (1978).
\textsuperscript{37} Id. at 512.
\textsuperscript{38} Id.

\textit{Id.} See \textit{supra} note 19 and accompanying text. Bar candidates have due process rights. \textit{See} Willner v. Committee on Character and Fitness, 373 U.S. 96, 106 (1963) (cannot reject applicant without first giving notice and hearing either before committee or court having authority over bar admissions); Mattox v. Disciplinary Panel of U.S. Dist. Court, 758 F.2d 1362, 1367-68 (10th Cir. 1985) (due process requirements of notice and hearing should apply equally to federal and state court admission decisions). The burden of proof is on the individual to prove his or her fitness. \textit{See, e.g.,} Konigsberg v. State Bar of California, 566 U.S. 36, 40-41 (1961). In a disciplinary proceeding the state has the burden of proving the lawyer's unfitness. \textit{See, e.g.,} \textit{In re Simpson}, 47 III. 2d 562, 566, 268 N.E.2d 20, 22 (1971).

\textsuperscript{39} See Simons v. Bellinger, 643 F.2d 774, 777-78 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Kissell v. Breskow, 579 F.2d 425, 430 (7th Cir. 1978); Clark v. State of Washington, 366 F.2d 678, 681 (9th Cir. 1966).

\textit{Id.} See \textit{Rosenfeld v. Clark}, 586 F. Supp. 1332 (D. Vt. 1984) (board of bar examiners immune from damages for failure to review applicant's examination within statutorily prescribed time period), \textit{aff'd}, 760 F.2d 253 (2d Cir. 1985); Louis v. Supreme Court of Nevada, 490 F. Supp. 1174, 1180-81 (D. Nev. 1980) (Board of Bar Examiners and state bar immune from suit as they are under direct control and supervision of state supreme court); Greene v. Zank, 158 Cal. App. 3d 497, 506, 204 Cal. Rptr. 770, 781 (1984) (state bar and committee members have absolute quasi-judicial immunity for acts while performing plaintiff's pre-admission investigation). Bar examiners have been found exempt from antitrust thread running through the cases is the belief that as arms of the court, these committee actions are actually actions of the state court. Therefore, if the official is acting in a quasi-judicial capacity he should be granted absolute immunity; if his actions are ministerial and executive, he should not.

CONCLUSION

The most immediate effect of Forrester v. White is that courts reviewing whether an act is judicial, administrative, or legislative will focus more on the form and substance of the proceedings. The decision by the Sixth Circuit in Sparks to immunize judges and bar committee members from damage suits for their bar admission decisions should not adversely affect the rights of applicants. The possibility that a court or its committee may arbitrarily determine an applicant is unfit to practice will not leave the applicant without recourse. Despite the defense of judicial immunity for admission decisions, applicants clearly have due process rights and an appellate remedy. Sparks should not be interpreted as either altering or diminishing those rights.

Katherine Ann Wopat

See Hoover, 466 U.S. at 573 (actions of committee were in reality those of state supreme court); Simons, 643 F.2d at 781 (committee members "must almost by definition make decisions comparable to those of a judge.").

Rosenfeld, 586 F. Supp. at 1339. For example, bar examiners judicial duties would include determining which applicants are qualified for admission and ministerial duties would include providing an applicant with review of his/her examination results. Id.

See Ohse v. Hughes, 863 F.2d 22 (7th Cir. 1988). On remand from the Supreme Court after its decision in Forrester, the Seventh Circuit indicated that absolute immunity may attach to the actions of a panel of judges in terminating a probation officer if the procedures used at the termination hearing were those normally employed in an adjudication proceeding, i.e., right to counsel, cross-examination of adverse witnesses, discovery, verbatim transcript and a discernible burden of proof. Id. at 24.