CPLR 203(b)(5): Sixty-day toll available for contractual limitation period provided that delivery of the summons and complaint upon proper official is effectuated within the contractual limitation period

CPLR 203(b)(5) allows a plaintiff to receive an automatic sixty-day extension of the applicable statute of limitations merely by delivering the summons and complaint to the appropriate county sheriff or clerk.¹ Use of this tolling provision is widespread

(b) Claim in complaint. A claim asserted in the complaint is interposed against the defendant or a co-defendant united in interest with him when: . . .

5. The summons is delivered to the sheriff of that county outside the city of New York or is filed with the clerk of that county within the city of New York in which the defendant resides, is employed or is doing business, or if none of the foregoing is known to the plaintiff after reasonable inquiry, then of the county in which the defendant is known to have last resided, been employed or been engaged in business, or in which the cause of action arose; or if the defendant is a corporation, of a county in which it may be served or in which the cause of action arose; provided that:

(i) The summons is served upon the defendant within sixty days after the period of limitation would have expired but for this provision . . .

Id.

Compliance with the provisions of CPLR 203(b)(5) extends not only to the statutes of limitations set forth in the CPLR, but to those in other chapters of New York law, as long as the provisions of CPLR 203 are not inconsistent with those other provisions. See, e.g., Clough v. Board of Educ., 56 App. Div. 2d 233, 234-36, 392 N.Y.S.2d 170, 172-73 (4th Dep't 1977) (one year and 90-day period of limitation prescribed in GML 50-i extended by sixty-day tolling period of CPLR 203(b)(5)). In order to benefit from the sixty-day extension, the summons must be delivered to the appropriate sheriff or clerk and not to a state marshal or special deputy. See 1 WK&M ¶ 203.14, at 2-111. In federal court, delivery to the district court's clerk has been held to be the equivalent to service upon a county sheriff. See Gold v. Jeep Corp., 579 F. Supp. 256, 258 (E.D.N.Y. 1984). The court noted that a federal litigant in a diversity action does not have to depend on the services of a state official where that litigant is not seeking greater substantive rights than he would be accorded in a state court. See id. at 259. If the summons in a state court action is delivered to the wrong sheriff or filed with the county clerk of an improper county, the delivery is deemed insufficient. See Roberts v. Schuh, 55 Misc. 2d 996, 997, 287 N.Y.S.2d 609, 610 (Sup. Ct. Orange County 1968) (60-day tolling provision inapplicable when summons delivered to sheriff of wrong county). Literally, the sixty-day extension is to be tacked onto the end of whatever limitations period otherwise remains. However, despite the statutory language, some authorities believe that section 203(b)(5) only gives an alternative sixty-days, measured from delivery to the proper official. See SIEGEL § 47, at 48.
because New York, unlike other jurisdictions, does not consider an action commenced until service of the summons has been completed. Despite the restrictive language contained in CPLR 201 on the applicability of the article 2 limitations periods, use of the CPLR 203(b)(5) tolling provision has received judicial approval in a variety of actions. Recently, in Berkshire Life Insurance Co. v.

2. CPLR 201 (McKinney 1972). Section 201 provides that:

An action, including one brought in the name or for the benefit of the state, must be commenced within the time specified in this article unless a different time is prescribed by law or a shorter time is prescribed by written agreement. No court shall extend the time limited by law for the commencement of an action.

Id. The purpose of the limitations periods enumerated in article 2 is to compel a plaintiff to bring his claim in a timely fashion while giving a defendant prompt notice and eliminating the uncertainty surrounding stale claims. See Vastola v. Maer, 48 App. Div. 2d 561, 564, 370 N.Y.S.2d 955, 958 (2d Dep't 1975), aff'd, 39 N.Y.2d 1019, 1021, 355 N.E.2d 300, 300, 387 N.Y.S.2d 246, 246 (1976).

Notwithstanding the public policy of giving repose to human affairs, the CPLR does provide for extensions and tollings of the statutes of limitations. See, e.g., CPLR 207 (McKinney 1972) (defendant outside state when action accrues, statute of limitations tolled until return); CPLR 208 (McKinney 1972 & Supp. 1987) (infancy and insanity of plaintiffs result in tolling).

4. It should be noted, however, that New York courts have not uniformly granted the sixty-day tolling of CPLR 203(b)(5). See, e.g., De Luca v. New York City Transit Auth., 119 Misc. 2d 523, 523, 464 N.Y.S.2d 340, 340-41 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1983) (extension unavailable in personal injury action against Port Authority because of compact between New York and New Jersey); Gerr v. State, 102 Misc. 2d 350, 353, 423 N.Y.S.2d 407, 409-10 (Ct. Cl. 1979) (tolling provision not applicable to service of notice of intention under § 10 of Court of Claims Act); Family Bargain Centers, Inc. v. Village of Herkimer, 56 Misc. 2d 768, 770, 290 N.Y.S.2d 207, 210 (Sup. Ct. Herkimer County 1968) (60-day toll not available to extend time limitation under GML).
Fernandez, the Appellate Division, Second Department, held that use of the section 203(b)(5) extension period was available to the plaintiff where, pursuant to Insurance Law section 3203(a)(3), the limitation period for commencing an action was fixed by an insurance contract. In Fernandez, the plaintiff insurance company issued a policy on the life of the defendant-husband on November 5, 1982. Shortly thereafter, the plaintiff received notification of the insured's disappearance. Prior to the expiration of the two-year incontestability period contained in the policy, the plaintiff insti-

10 See N.Y. INS. LAW § 3203(a)(3) (McKinney 1985 & Supp. 1987). This section provides:
(a) All life insurance policies, except as otherwise stated herein, delivered or issued for delivery in this state, shall contain in substance the following provisions, or provisions which the superintendent deems to be more favorable to policyholders: . . .
(3) that the policy shall be incontestable after being in force during the life of the insured for a period of two years from its date of issue . . . .

Id. This statement, which is required to be in every life insurance policy, is commonly known as an “incontestability clause.” 18 G. COUCH, COUCH ON INSURANCE 2d § 72:1 (rev. ed. 1983); 1A J. APPELMAN, INSURANCE LAW AND PRACTICE § 311 (1981). “The word ‘incontestable,’ as used in policies providing that they shall become incontestable, means indisputable, and amounts to a guaranty that no objection shall be taken to defeat the policy on the death of the person whose life was insured.” 18 G. COUCH, supra, § 72:1 (footnote omitted).

The use of the incontestability clause in insurance policies first achieved widespread use in the United States in 1879. See L. VILLARONGA, THE INCONTESTABLE CLAUSE: AN HISTORICAL ANALYSIS 12 (1976). Insurance companies adopted the use of these clauses in response to negative public opinion concerning unfavorable policy provisions, and to gain a competitive advantage over those companies that did not adopt such clauses. Id. at 14-15. The primary benefit of the clause to the insured is that after the policy has been in effect for two years, the insurer cannot contest its validity on the grounds that the insured obtained the policy by fraudulent misrepresentations. See Berkshire Life Ins. Co. v. Weinig, 290 N.Y. 6, 8-10, 47 N.E.2d 418, 420-21 (1943); see generally 18 G. COUCH, supra, § 72:2 (purpose of clause is to nullify warranties and conditions that might defeat insured's rights after stipulated time passes). However, should the insured die before the clause has expired, the insurer has a continuing right to contest the policy on the grounds of misrepresentation. See Simon v. Government Employees Life Ins. Co., 79 App. Div. 2d 705, 705, 434 N.Y.S.2d 447, 449 (2d Dep't 1980) (mem.) Although the clause is made a part of the policy, it is not entirely a contractual provision, and is considered to some extent to be a statute of limitations. See 1A J. APPELMAN, supra, at 312. “The incontestable clauses are enforced with particularity by the courts because of the desirable purpose which they have. It is their purpose to put a checkmate upon litigation; to prevent, after the lapse of a certain period of time, an expensive resort to the courts . . . .” Id. at 311. Inclusion of incontestability clauses is now retuted this action to rescind the policy, maintaining that the defendant-husband had fraudulently misrepresented the condition of his health in his insurance application. On October 5, 1984, the plaintiff delivered copies of the summons and complaint to the sheriff, pursuant to CPLR 203(b)(5), in order to receive a sixty-day extension of the incontestability period. Service was not accomplished until December 15, 1984, more than two years after the policy had been issued. Consequently, the defendant-wife moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that service was untimely as the summons and complaint were not delivered until after the incontestability period had expired. Finding that the sixty-day extension of CPLR 203(b)(5) was unavailable to extend a contractual limitations period, Supreme Court, Special Term, granted the motion to dismiss. However, on plaintiff's motion for reargument, the court vacated its prior decision and reinstated the complaint.

The Appellate Division, Second Department, unanimously affirmed Special Term's denial of the defendant-wife's motion to dismiss the complaint.\textsuperscript{17} Writing for the court, Justice Mangano held that the incontestability clause was, in effect, a statute of limitations,\textsuperscript{18} and, as such, the tolling provision of CPLR 203(b)(5) was available to afford the plaintiff an additional sixty days in which to accomplish service.\textsuperscript{19} The court, in reaching its decision, relied heavily on the opinion of the Appellate Division, First Department, in \textit{Unionmutual Stock Life Insurance Co. of New York v. Kliever},\textsuperscript{20} where the First Department addressed issues similar to those presented in \textit{Fernandez}.\textsuperscript{21} In light of the pervasive application that CPLR 203(b)(5) has received in the past,\textsuperscript{22} it is submitted that the Appellate Division, Second Department, correctly adjudicated the appeal in the \textit{Fernandez} action. Furthermore, a continued broad application of CPLR 203(b)(5) is needed to insure that plaintiffs receive a judicial determination of their claims when attempting to serve problematic defendants. However, it is suggested that the need for a CPLR 203(b)(5) extension would be obviated by changing the New York view that deems a civil action commenced only upon delivery of the summons to the defendant.\textsuperscript{23}

New York has long recognized the similarities between an incontestability clause and a statute of limitations. \textit{See, e.g., Killian v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co.,} 251 N.Y. 44, 49, 166 N.E. 798, 800 (1929) (clause is akin to statute of limitations); Wright v. Mutual Benefit Life Ass'n, 118 N.Y. 237, 243, 23 N.E. 186, 187 (1890) (incontestability clauses and statutes of limitations serve similar purposes).

In \textit{Unionmutual}, the plaintiff-insurer instituted an action to rescind a life insurance policy on the ground that the defendant-insured obtained the policy through fraudulent misrepresentation. \textit{Unionmutual,} 83 App. Div. 2d 805, 806, 442 N.Y.S.2d 6, 6 (1st Dep't 1981). Therefore, the New York Legislature should adopt a more progressive approach, as embodied in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which deems the commencement of an action to occur upon the filing of the complaint with the clerk of the court.\(^{24}\)

The unavailability of the CPLR 203(b)(5) extension has been limited by the courts to those instances where compliance with the time limitation, as fixed by law, is deemed to be a condition precedent to the existence of a cause of action.\(^{25}\) In determining whether a time period is a condition precedent or a statute of limitations, some courts have utilized the "creation of a new right of action" test.\(^{26}\) Accordingly, if the legislature creates a new right of action unknown at common law, and the same statute imposes a limitations period, this period will be deemed a condition precedent to bringing suit.\(^{27}\) A litigant who has failed to observe these time limi-

\(^{24}\) See Fed. R. Civ. P. 3; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(e) (filing with clerk constitutes filing with court). Rule 3 simply provides that "[a] civil action is commenced by filing a complaint with the court." Fed. R. Civ. P. 3. Thereafter, the clerk of the court issues a summons, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(a), and a plaintiff is afforded 120 days, from the date of issuance of the summons, in which to effectuate service. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(j).

At first glance, the differences between the federal method and the New York method may not appear significant. However, the differences are readily apparent in the situation where the summons and complaint are filed with the court on the day the statute of limitations is due to expire. The federal litigant would be given 120 days in which to serve his summons and an extension may be available if "good cause" is shown. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(j). In New York, only if the plaintiff delivers the summons to the proper sheriff or clerk is he afforded an additional sixty days in which to serve the defendant. See CPLR 203(b)(5) (McKinney 1972 & Supp. 1987). This sixty-day difference could have a meaningful effect on the plaintiff's ability to interpose his claim. Furthermore, New York's adoption of the federal method would obviate the need for CPLR 203(b)(5) altogether.

\(^{26}\) See, e.g., Romano v. Romano, 19 N.Y.2d 444, 447, 227 N.E.2d 399, 391, 280 N.Y.S.2d 570, 573 (1967) (if statute creating action attaches time limit for commencement, that is part of the cause of action); Cimo v. State, 306 N.Y. 143, 150, 116 N.E.2d 290, 294 (1953) (when legislature creates new cause of action and includes a time limit in statute, action is subject to that limitation alone).

\(^{27}\) See Cimo, 306 N.Y. at 150, 116 N.E.2d at 294. Although this approach has been stions has not satisfied the condition precedent to bringing suit, and this omission, like the failure to observe a statute of limitations generally, will warrant a dismissal of the action. Applying this test to the Fernandez case, it would appear that an incontestability clause, although a creation of statute, is not in the nature of a condition precedent. A suit on an insurance policy is merely a breach of contract action, an action not unknown at common law; hence, the tolling provisions of CPLR article 2 are applicable to extend a limitations period fixed in an insurance policy.

The broad and consistent application of CPLR 203(b)(5) has again achieved an equitable result, as evidenced by the Appellate Division, Second Department, decision in Fernandez. However, even a continuing application of CPLR 203(b)(5) may not assure service within the requisite period when a plaintiff is confronted with an evasive defendant or a condition precedent to suit. It is suggested, therefore, that the more progressive federal approach, which deems an action commenced upon filing of the complaint, be adopted in New York.
