form of an undertaking by the plaintiff,\(^\text{169}\) similar to the plaintiff's bond in Louisiana; the defendant may reclaim possession of the chattel;\(^\text{170}\) the statute may be read to require the plaintiff to show that the chattel is in danger of being destroyed or removed; it may be construed to require that only a judge may grant an order of seizure; and the requirement of an immediate post-seizure hearing may be inferred. In short, the vagueness of the statute permits interpretation in accordance with Mitchell, thereby satisfying the flexibility espoused by the Supreme Court therein. However, it must be noted that New York courts may continue to require that the debtor receive notice and an opportunity to be heard prior to sequestration. In light of the Porta decision, this would appear unlikely.

General Obligations Law

General Obligations Law § 15-108: Amendment allows plaintiff to settle with one tortfeasor without affecting his rights against remaining tortfeasors.

A new subdivision (a) of section 15-108 of the General Obligations Law\(^\text{171}\) provides that a release given to one of two or more joint tortfeasors, unless specified to the contrary, releases that tortfeasor only. Prior to its amendment, section 15-108 stipulated that a release reduced any eventual recovery of the releasor by the amount indicated in the release or by the consideration paid for it, whichever was greater.\(^\text{172}\) As amended, section 15-108 provides that a release reduces the plaintiff's recovery by the amount of damages attributable to the released tortfeasor, if that amount is greater than the amount stipulated in the release or the consideration paid for it.\(^\text{173}\) Additionally, subdivision (b)

\(^{170}\) Prior to revision, CPLR 7103 required that a defendant post a bond before he could regain possession of a chattel. N.Y. Sess. Laws [1962], ch. 308, § 7103 (McKinney). The plaintiffs in Laprease contended that such a requirement was violative of the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment since it was discriminatory against the poor. While the court found it unnecessary to consider that contention, the legislature eliminated the possibility of a recurrence of that argument with the removal of the bond requirement, 7B McKinney's CPLR 7103, supp. commentary at 139 (1971). Mitchell, however, approved the requirement for such a bond for the protection of the creditor. As a result, an issue arises as to whether the New York provision may be viewed as a violation of the creditor's rights.

\(^{173}\) This amendment is intended to encourage settlements and simultaneously assure that no non-settling tortfeasor will be liable for more of the damages than his equitable share. See Twelfth Annual Report of the Judicial Conference to the Legislature on the CPLR, as appearing in 2 N.Y. Sess. Laws [1974] 1817 (McKinney). Another purpose of this subsection is to allow injured parties to settle their claims against one defendant allows for a released tortfeasor to be free from any liability to any other tortfeasor for contribution, provided that a good faith release was given by the injured party.\textsuperscript{174} A new subdivision (c) provides that a tortfeasor who procures his own release waives his right to contribution from any other tortfeasor.\textsuperscript{175}

\textbf{JUDICIARY LAW}

\textit{Judiciary Law} § 148-a: Legislature creates a medical malpractice part in each judicial district.

The newly added section 148-a of the Judiciary Law\textsuperscript{176} provides that the supreme court in each judicial district is to have an additional part to deal exclusively with the disposition of medical malpractice suits.\textsuperscript{177} Each part will consist of a three-member panel composed of a presiding justice appointed by the appellate division, an attorney, and a physician. The presiding justice will formulate a list of attorneys with trial experience. Each individual on the list will serve on the panel on a rotating basis, service being confined to one case at a time. A similar method will be employed with respect to the medical panel member.

The purpose of the new system is to encourage the pre-trial disposi-
