CPLR 1102: The state is responsible for indigents' publication costs in matrimonial actions.

The Appellate Division, First Department, recently held that New York City was not required to pay the costs of service by publication for an indigent plaintiff in a divorce proceeding. The Appellate Division, Second Department, adopted this holding in Jeffreys v. Jeffreys. It viewed the absence of any statutory authorization for a city to pay such costs as the decisive factor: "The fact that payment by the City for service by publication may fit a logical framework cannot substitute for the required statutory authorization for such payment by the City. . . ."

It is refreshing to note that this long-neglected area of law is beginning to receive appropriate attention. However, the needs of the indigent, not whether the city or the state should pay certain fees, should be the primary concern.

CPLR 1102(b): Poor persons held not entitled to free use of a stenographer for depositions before trial.

In recent years, the legislative and judicial branches of government have become mindful of the differential treatment afforded economic groups under our system of justice. The judiciary has attempted to lessen the problems indigents face in reaching the courts. However,
