Highway Law–Section 282e As Affecting Common Law Liability of Owner of Motor Vehicle (Fluegel v. Coudert, 244 N.Y. 392 (1927))

St. John's Law Review

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarship.law.stjohns.edu/lawreview

This Recent Development in New York Law is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at St. John's Law Scholarship Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in St. John's Law Review by an authorized editor of St. John's Law Scholarship Repository. For more information, please contact selbyc@stjohns.edu.
the suit of the purchaser, and, apparently, no authority to the contrary has been found by the learned author.

Once the fact of knowledge is established, it would seem unfair upon principle to deprive the original purchaser of his specific remedy merely because the title has passed from the party with whom he contracted; nor should a subsequent vendee be heard to disclaim knowledge gained by an attorney within the apparent scope of his authority while handling a matter entrusted to him.

Highway Law; Section 282e As Affecting Common Law Liability of Owner of Motor Vehicle—The action is to recover for death alleged to have been occasioned through the negligent operation of an automobile. The uncontradicted evidence necessitates the conclusion that the driver of the car was using it at the time of the accident for his own purposes exclusively, without the permission and against the commands of the defendant his employer. Held, the action would not lie inasmuch as the plaintiff gained nothing by Sec. 282e of the Highway Law (Cons. Law Chap. 25) providing that the owners of motor vehicles, operated upon public highways, shall be liable for death or injuries to person or property resulting from negligent operation by any person legally using same with the permission, express or implied, of the owner. Judgment affirmed. Fluegel v. Coudert, 244 N. Y. 392 (1927).

The Court held that the effect of the statute was to render obsolete the doctrine of such cases as Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, 220 N. Y., 111, 115 N. E. 443 (1917); Potts v. Pardee, 220 N. Y., 431, 436, 116 N. E. 78 (1917), and that liability no longer depended on use or operation by a servant in the “business” of a master, but upon its legal use or operation in the business “or otherwise” of the master with permission or consent. Thus the owner who loaned the car to a friend or an employee would be liable for the negligence of the operator though the loan was unrelated to employment and a mere friendly accommodation. The father would be liable for the negligence of the son to whom he had entrusted the use of the family automobile (Van Blaricom v. Dodgson, supra). The Court significantly stated, “We make no attempt at exhaustive enumeration. What has been said will suffice for illustration or example.” It would thus appear that the Highway Law does not recognize such independent operation by a gratuitous bailee as will relieve the bailor from liability for the former’s negligence, and the Court’s opinion would seem to indicate that the section is still charged with such pregnant possibilities as will materially change the law of automobiles. 1 St. John’s L. Rev., 53, 54 (1926).

Sales—Election of Remedies—Rights of Parties—Defendant sold to one Edgar an automobile under a conditional bill of sale contract. Edgar paid $50 in cash and gave a promissory note for the balance of purchase price. The conditional sale contract provides inter alia, that title should not pass until full price was paid, an acceleration clause for balance in case of default. In event of such default vendor may take immediate possession of property with privilege of resale, seller to have right to enforce any one or more